1. About Caixin

Caixin Media and Caixin Global

Caixin is a media group dedicated to providing financial and business news through periodicals, online content, mobile apps, conferences, books and TV/video programs. Caixin aims to blaze a trail that helps traditional media prosper in the new media age through integrated multimedia platforms.

Caixin's editorial team are well-known for independent thinking and professional practices. They are insiders with a profound understanding of China's economic and social transition. They are sharp observers with a global vision.

Built upon Caixin Media's award winning journalism, Caixin Global delivers fast-paced, reliable business and financial news about China to the world. It offers its English news via a 24/7 digital and mobile platform (caixinglobal.com). It also has an intelligence arm that offers policy analysis, industry monitoring, and in-depth research with insight into China's economic policy-making and its financial markets.

Bond Market Default

Caixin has monitored a new trend in China's bond market since 2013 — that of “rigid payment” being gradually broken in the market of non-standardized debt assets. On the arrival of material defaults, Caixin tracked the entire default process by a series of state-owned and private enterprises, and therefore was widely trusted by market participants for its independent position.

Meanwhile, the reports exposed long-standing corrupt practices in China's bond market, including bribery during bond issuance and tunneling behaviors in secondary market trading.

Cover Story: A Year On, a Quieter Outbreak Still Sickness Thousands in Northwest China

By Wang Mengyao, Du Caicai, Bao Xianzhong, Chen Liang and Han Wei

Editor's note: Pseudonyms are used in this story to protect the privacy of people affected by the disease in Yanchangbao.

Last September, 40-year-old shopkeeper Gao Hong in Northwest China's Lanzhou city was hit with crippling joint pain and persistent fever. It took nearly six months for doctors to diagnose her condition as brucellosis, an animal-borne infectious bacterial disease.

By then, she had missed the window for the most effective treatment, leaving her with a hard-to-cure chronic condition that requires long-term medication. Since July, it's been hard for her to walk unassisted because of the joint pain.

Exclusive: Americans to Control TikTok Global Board, While China Keeps Majority Ownership

By Gao Cong and Tang Ge

The proposed new TikTok Global board, which would consist of five Americans and one Chinese, could be a first step toward allowing the administration of U.S. President Donald Trump that Americans already own a portion of the app's U.S. operations.

An envisioned new company consisting of the U.S. operations of the popular TikTok video app would be majority-owned by Chinese parent ByteDance Ltd., but controlled by a board of American executives from the likes of Sequoia Capital and Walmart Inc., a source with knowledge of the situation told Caixin.

The deal, which has received a tentative nod from U.S. President Donald Trump, would see ByteDance bring in U.S. software giant Oracle Corp. and retailing powerhouse Walmart Inc. as minority equity partners for the new company called TikTok Global, valuing it at more than $60 billion, the source told Caixin, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The arrangement that would see the new company's majority equity controlled by a Chinese owner while management control rested in the hands of U.S. executives is similar to a reverse situation used by most Chinese companies that list in the U.S. Such arrangements allow for diversified ownership of companies from 00561-1968.

In Depth: China Chip Sector Has the Money, Now It Just Needs the Workers

By He Shujing and Mo Yelin

A technician works at a chip company in Hua'an, Jiangsu province, on June 16.

What do you get when you dump hundreds of billions of dollars in government and private investor cash into a limited labor market with the aim of building a world-class microchip sector from scratch?

A paradise for workers, perhaps, but also a mess.

That's what's shaping up in China, where a new group of companies flush with cash are in the midst of a fierce tussle for a limited pool of talent. That, in turn, is throwing a wrench into Beijing's plans to develop a homegrown chip industry to offset growing U.S. antagonism towards the nation's few world-class players in the sector like Huawei Technologies Co. Ltd.

CX Daily: 'Made in Hong Kong' Ban May Have Little Impact on Trade

Hong Kong

End of 'made in Hong Kong' brand expected to hurt businesses but not trade

Washington's decision to begin labeling Hong Kong goods exported to the U.S. as "Made in China" in November could deal a blow to the city's brands and raised concern among businesses, but the move may have little impact on overall trade, given how few goods Hong Kong actually makes and ships to the U.S.

The U.S. Customs and Border Protection published a notice Aug. 11 that goods imported from Hong Kong will no longer be allowed to indicate Hong Kong as their origin and must be marked to indicate China as part of President Donald Trump's executive order suspending the special treatment Hong Kong enjoyed under the United States-Hong Kong Policy Act of 1986. The labeling rule was set to take effect Sept. 25 but was postponed to Nov. 9, six days after the U.S. presidential election.

World's Richest Create Twice the Carbon Emissions of Poorest 50%, Study Finds

QUICK TAKE

It's new: The richest 1% of people in the world were responsible for more than double the amount of global carbon dioxide emissions compared to the poorest 50% between 1990 and 2015, new research has shown.

Though carbon dioxide emissions increased by 60% during the quarter-century period, the rise in emissions from the wealthiest 1% of the population was three times greater than the poorest half, according to a report published Monday by the charity group Oxfam and the Stockholm Environment Institute, a nonprofit research organization.

What else: The study said high consumption and developed countries' widespread use of carbon-emitting transport are exhausting the world's carbon budget — the amount of carbon dioxide that can be released into the atmosphere while maintaining a certain temperature range.
